Hello!

As a strategic economist and advisor, I am passionate about making an impact and guiding leaders towards success.

I began my career in a consulting firm, providing advice in environmental economics, agri-food economics, and strategic planning. When I joined the executive team, my team successfully doubled output within a year through implementing an effective management system. Following the sale of the company, I ventured into entrepreneurship, establishing my own management consulting business, which later merged into KPMG-SECOR. Having spent a few years with top accounting firms, I currently provide independent consulting services focused on strategic planning and leadership development. Over the years, I have advised and partnered with over 300 companies and organizations throughout various sectors, including philanthropies, manufacturing companies, co-ops, and public companies, improving their management systems or providing insights.

As a former TEC member, I understand the value of in-person interactions with fellow leaders and speakers who bring their expertise and experience to the TEC meetings. Seeing the impact TEC has on leaders and businesses inspired me to become a TEC Chair. Over the years, I have advised the leadership team of over 300 companies and organizations across various sectors, conducting strategic planning exercises and improving their management system.

On a personal note, I find joy in activities such as running, reading, listening to podcasts, as well as engaging in martial arts and philosophy. I have a Masters in Agri-Food Economics and an Executive MBA from Université Laval. I balance my professional pursuits with my fulfilling family life, sharing it with my wife, and two daughters.
